

Sociology of aging is the final phase of an individual's life, where an elderly confronts many difficulties with regard to their physical condition, mental health, and support system. The challenges of aging of course require intervention. One of the interventions that can support wellbeing of the aging population is the profession of social work. This book designs the interventions intended to assist the elderly clients in alleviating problems impeding their wellbeing. In doing so, it aims to assess the impact of social work intervention in the care of the aged.
